PREFACE.

Gov. THOMAS J. JARVIS :

In the publication of this initial volume of the series, which will contain the names of the men sent out by North Carolina in behalf of the Confederate States of America, I follow your suggestions in making certain prefatory explanations, that are due to all concerned in the production of this roster. The State was very deliberate in assuming her place in the great American controversy; but having once reached a conclusion as to what was right in the premises, there was no shrinking from responsibility or forgetfulness of the men who went to the field to make good the resolution of May 20th, 1861. No community ever so generally of their own accord took up arms. Never in human records was there an instance of more united determination than was seen in that memorable Spring, when the hope of peace had perished and it was realized that only by bloodshed was the act of secession to be consummated. Our people had not been distinguished for love of the holiday displays and pageants, so dear to other communities. Our militia system had sunk into such neglect that the musters and reviews of that day were become objects of ridicule to many in our midst. No people could have appeared less disposed to mere military glory than the North Carolinians, who listened so sadly for news from Charleston and Fort Sumter. There were a few volunteer companies of infantry belonging to the larger towns, but not a company of cavalry or artillery in all the State. The people loved peace and had been abundantly protected by the nature of their coast from any apprehension of danger from abroad.

North Carolina, having exhausted counsel and entreaty upon those who were leaders on both sides in the great contention between the States, was at length made aware that peace had become impossible, and nothing was left but the choice of sides in a controversy not of her seeking. Very calmly and more in sorrow than wrath she went forth that was to convert her peaceful fields into one great military camp. There had been never much exceeding an hundred thousand votes polled at any State election, and the whole sum of the white population was but six hundred thousand souls. How many of these of their own accord left the endearments of home, at what they felt was the call of duty, this work seeks to disclose.

Among the many evidences of Gov. Vance's devotion to the cause the State had made her own, was the "Roll of Honor" inaugurated and prepared during his administration as Chief Magistrate of North Carolina. That work was an effort to enroll and preserve the names of the men, who thus at the peril of their lives were gone forth to make good the pledges of the Commonwealth. The same spirit of gratitude and patriotism which prompted the General Assembly of 1862 to this attempt, was supplemented on February 11th, 1881, when the Legislature, by another statute, committed to me the task of completing, as far as possible, a work that had been but partially executed. It was, perhaps, the proudest moment of my life when I was apprised that so honorable a task had been imposed upon me; but I foresaw the many difficulties and sorrows that would beset my labors. If Maj. Foote and his assistants made many mistakes when the witnesses were alive and the transactions fresh in public memory, how could I hope to avoid them, when twenty years have elapsed and so many have died or forgotten the dates and names we would recall. For instance, by some mistake, the killing of Col. Wood, as recorded on page 121, was attributed by the printers to Col. E. A. Osborn, whom I am happy to say is still alive and discharging his sacred functions as a clergyman of the Episcopal church.

In preparing this work, I have found great help in the "Roll of Honor;" but this work is silent as to campaigns subsequent to the fatal days at Gettysburg. The enlistments and casualties during 1864 and 1865 are not to be found on its pages. It was supposed by you, and almost by every one else, that it would be impossible to supply this omission at so late a day. With the consent and advice of the Trustees of the State Library, many muster rolls of earlier regiments were prepared and sent to surviving officers, with the request that they would supply the missing names and casualties of their commands. With a very few exceptions this effort proved a failure. Many of the rolls were never returned, and of those recovered but little was to be gained in the way of valuable information. In very rare instances can men be found who, after the lapse of twenty years, can recall, without the aid of contemporaneous notes, the minutæ of names and dates, so largely constituting the substance of this work.

I was impressed with the belief that valuable information could be obtained in Washington among the Confederate records captured at Richmond in 1865. You probably remember that this conviction of mine was discussed, when we were agreeing upon the terms and features of this work. I vainly sought for information touching the existence of such documents by application to our members of Congress. Through the courtesy of Gen. Marcus J. Wright, of Tennessee, who is engaged by the United States Government in the publication of the "Records of the Rebellion," I was informed that muster rolls of North Carolina troops, in the Confederate service, were to be found in the Archives Office of the War Department. Upon his suggestion I visited the Federal Capital and found abundant returns of nearly every North Carolina regiment and battalion mustered into the service of the Confederate States. The latest of these returns were made in December, 1864, and in some instances they are found bearing date as late as February, 1865. I was greatly rejoiced that here was the means of supplying a large portion of the deficiencies of the records in the Adjutant General's office in Raleigh. I take this occasion to acknowledge the kindness of Hon. Robert T. Lincoln, Secretary of War, who not only gave orders for my admission to the Archives Office, but also for the extension of such courtesies and facilities to me, that my hours of research were continually brightened by civilities that I shall be slow to forget. To Gen. Wright, Mr. Hodgkin of the War Department, and Mr. Tasker of the Archives Office, I am also abundantly thankful for many acts of civility and gracious assistance.

Lieut. Col. Frederick A. Olds, of the Adjutant General's Office of North Carolina, has been uniformly a model of kindly and active co-operation, but in no wise surpasses in that respect these strangers upon whom I had no claim, but their knowledge of the fact that I was in Washington to carry out the behests of North Carolina in her noble effort to embalm the memory of her living and dead soldiers.

Of course with all this addition to our means of information touching the names and record of the men who bore their part as the soldiers of North Carolina in the war between the States, there was much to cheer me in the task I had assumed; but alas! army reports are like every thing else that is human. They vary from full statements to a mere pretence at telling who constituted a company and what became of the men. Some were found to have omitted many names, while scarcely one had full accounts of the casualties. The orderly sergeants being often unlettered, the names of men assumed a range and variety of treatment in their spelling that was really wonderful. Perhaps some will be astonished at the appellations that were thus given them; but the brave fellows who made up these rolls by their camp fires won the admiration of the world by their valor, and are not to be censured for their want of orthography.

It has been frequently undertaken by different persons to state the number of troops sent out by North Carolina in the four years of war, but how one of them could have ever thought he had data for approximating the result is a mystery only to be solved by such remarkable guessers. If we had on the rolls in North Carolina the names of one hundred and twenty-three thousand men, then the additions disclosed by papers in the Archives Office will largely increase this estimate. In some instances I found in a single company as many as ninety names that were wholly left out of the count on the rolls of our State. The sixteen regiments contained in this volume embrace about thirty thousand names. There were sixty-eight regiments of original volunteers. To these are to be added the four regiments of Senior and Junior Reserves, and with the battalions added will increase the sum to the equivalent of about eighty full regiments. If these shall at all approximate the strength of the corps included in this portion of the roster, there will be a large addition to the number of men we have heretofore supposed were contributed by the State. At this stage of the work it is impossible for me to say what that number was, but I feel assured that one hundred and fifty thousand would not be an over-estimate of the force.

In preparing a work so largely consisting of proper names and dates, the errors must be very numerous. It is almost impossible to write anything so plainly if these two elements enter largely, but there will be errors, unless the author of the original manuscript is also the proof reader. These rolls have each been several times copied by different scribes and many mistakes have doubtless been made as to the names. I have tried to secure all the accuracy that a close comparison of the manuscript with the printed proofs would afford, but I am still well assured, with all this care, some will fail to recognize their patronymics.

Alas! with so much patriotism and valor on their part that fate should have decreed that no guerdon remains for those herein recorded but this act of tardy justice afforded by North Carolina in memory of their services. No men ever acted more nobly or unselfishly. How long they battled against great odds and how they kept at their post, with the cries of famishing families at home ringing in their ears, will be a theme on which the historians of the future will never cease to dilate. These pages with all their fearful record of death on the field and in the hospital fall far short of the truth; for many were slain or perished otherwise, of whom no record was made. In some instances not a casualty was reported in a whole company, although it gave four years of faithful and bloody service. Of course it is too late now to remedy this neglect of their officers, but enough has been disclosed by those who did their duty in this respect to show how great was the loss of life. The men of North Carolina who went to the field and failed to return when peace was made, were a great army within themselves. They were fully as numerous as the force with which General Lee assailed the host of his adversaries at Gettysburg. It is pitiful in perusal of the records to see how sometimes every able bodied man of a large family went together and died together for a cause they loved. We, who know the purity of their promptings and how uncomplainingly they died, may also attribute patriotism and sincerity to their foes, but a sacred duty rests upon us to defend their memories from the aspersions of such small malignants as see no good but in the coterie to which they belong. The State of North Carolina, in preserving the names of those who died in her defence, does not thereby in any wise prove derelict in her Federal relations. She can preserve faith in view of the fresh obligations assumed in 1865, and yet keep green the memories of those who served so well and yet so unavailingly for the "lost cause."

The gratitude and patriotism of the Legislature of 1881 has reared a monument which was ordered to be kept at every court house in the State as a perpetual memorial of those for whom no other recognition is now proper or possible. The untold millions lavished upon the surviving victors in the great struggle are not begrudged by the men we once knew and who now sleep so quietly on the sunny slopes of Gettysburg and Antietam. Surely the heroes who grew immortal at Chancellorsville are at least entitled to their place in the bead-roll of fame. Their glory need disturb no man but one whose malignity imagines the possibility of their revisiting the pale glimpses of the moon and thus renewing a contest which has been settled for all time. The State that grows oblivious of devotion to her interests on the part of her sons will soon only get a lukewarm defence in the hour of danger. Political mistakes may be blunders and therefore crimes to him who only judges a cause by the measure of its success; but such a course would debase humanity into a world of Talleyrands where truth and faith would be unknown and only the base promptings of selfish expediency the rule. North Carolina has never stopped to count the cost when honor indicated the pathway of duty. We who have survived the great holocaust well remember the feelings and promptings of the dread hour, when the embattled hosts were being marshalled for the struggle. We did not risk all we had and loved on a rash and thoughtless venture. It was well understood that a great and prolonged conflict would be necessary to settle the vexed issues that had roused to arms so many millions of the same people. It was their determination to settle by the sword an ancient and mortal controversy. It had grown with a century's iteration. Eloquent pleadings and generous concessions were alike unavailing to arrest the oncoming of a revolution in our affairs as a people. In the march of humanity, perhaps we of the South were too much blinded to see what might well have been accepted as inevitable; but where have been the men, who could rise to the height of self-abasement for the good of others? Where has human nature been willing to accept of poverty and humiliation, when thrust upon them by those whose aims were chiefly shaped in malice and who preached humanity with the hope of satiated revenge? Only the Son of God could die for the good of His murderers—even He was heard to pray: "If it be possible let this cup pass from me." King David prayed to be delivered from the hands of his enemies, as the last and greatest of human calamities. The issue involved not only financial ruin, but the political degradation and oppression of the South. They knew that with emancipation must come political power to the freed multitudes. They foresaw the league of ancient slave and traditional foeman. They were no dogs to be driven without complaint to their own dishonor, and thus strove to withhold a boon which in the fulness of time and overruling Providence had come nigh the bondsmen that were in our houses.

Will it ever be so, that those who are to come after us shall forget or misconstrue our motives? Will our posterity in plying wonder ask how so many brave men were content to die rather than yield the slow-coming bounty of the age to the Helots at their doors. Will they despise the chivalry of a people who could prefer death to rectifying an ancient wrong? If so, it will be through ignorance of the men whom they will thus disparage. No higher motives have fired the hearts or nerved the arms of any community than actuated those who in 1861 left their homes to go down into the valley of death. It was the uprising of people who were pervaded as no other race ever was, with determination to defend and assure their threatened autonomy. The descendants and inheritors of fathers, who had helped to achieve the independence of America, were resolved that the compact of 1787 should not be construed either to their injury or dishonor. They were not content that others should intrude themselves into the control of our social life. They could not abide the thought that people who were at best only allies should repeat the Athenian habit of changing alliance into hegemony and that into empire. They knew the slogan of slavery was at best a subterfuge. They knew that the cry of emancipation was only an excuse for assuming control of Southern lives and fortunes and that its accomplishment would not suspend the further incursions of men, who had resolved that in all things we must conform to their decrees. It was to preserve the grand doctrine of equal and independent States that the effort was made to establish a government which should for all time respect and uphold the rights of each individual in a galaxy of co-equal commonwealths. They were unwilling to consort longer with those who denounced the great compact as "a league with death and a covenant with hell." The slow torture of years filled with insult and re-primination culminated in the election of 1860. To the demands for fresh assurance against invaded rights, there was no concession. To the appeal for peaceful separation, came the promise of armed coercion. There was a roar of artillery in Charleston Harbor, the starry bunting went down, and then the dance of death began.

How long the men in gray held their places in the field will be considered one of the marvels of history. They were not aided as were the victors in the struggle of the preceding century by the friendly aid of an ocean rolling a thousand leagues of water between us and our foes. Their antagonists outnumbering them three to one and supplemented by the active aid of all civilized nations, were at their very doors, and yet with no fortresses for protection, they made their own breasts such a wall of defence that four years were consumed and a half million of the invaders had perished when the small remnant lay down their arms. It seemed that military maxims concerning stronger battalions and superior resources were to be reversed. Time and again the great hosts in blue went cowering back to the North as in fatal temerity the sure policy of defence was forsaken for splendid failures in Maryland and Pennsylvania. As the wasted ranks grew thinner they were still giving fresh evidence of their dangerous vitality until driven to the wall, the handful of survivors lay down their arms, the grim and scarred skeleton of an army that had grown forever immortal. How far Gen. Lee was indebted to the regiments from North Carolina for much of his fame was best attested by the mute eloquence of the dead men who lay upon the fields of his greatest success. No one who visited the scenes of carnage after the whirlwind of conflict had swept by, ever failed to be struck with numbers of North Carolinians that cumbered the ground. The charges of the 5th Regiment at Williamsburg, the 4th at Seven Pines, and those of the 11th and 26th at Gettysburg, were as bloody as that of any corps in any age. And yet these men who could be so easily led at any time into the very jaws of death when battle was raging, were models of quiet obedience in camp and on the weary march. They were gentle as they were brave, and even in the land of the foe were both merciful and true to the demands of military discipline.

It is then proper that a new generation should erect memorials to men who underwent so much to uphold what they thought was right. With the lapse of time many have been added to the list of those who perished in the war. Death has not ceased his rounds even in the times of peace, and each day sees the number of the survivors growing less. Before time has removed those who bore their parts in the struggle and thus can testify to the truth, there should be such data left to the men of the future, that the unsuccessful may not suffer by misapprehension of the facts. Justice to the men in grey by no means implies hostility to the Federal Government. Many causes of disagreement in the past have been removed, and the continued hostility of the sections is as unwise as it is unnecessary. In the providence of God we are again the citizens of an united Republic. The time is fast coming when equal honors will be accorded the dead on both sides in the great controversy. To America the graves of all her slain children must eventually become equally dear. They are the joint inheritance of an imperial race, and will ever remain the proudest evidence of the truth and valor of our people.

With these explanations and reflections, the work is respectfully submitted. Would that it were better done! No one can be more conscious than the author of its imperfections, but I have done the best I could and angels can do no more. With many thanks to yourself and to Messrs. Saunders and Scarborough for suggestions and courtesies, I am, Governor,

With high respect,

Very truly yours,

JOHN W. MOORE.

NOTE.—This Regiment was very imperfectly reported, both in the "Roll of Honor" and the returns sent to Richmond, and now to be seen in the Archives Office, of the War Department, in Washington. This is to be much regretted, as no corps of the Army of the Confederate States gave more brilliant service than the 4th and 5th North Carolina infantry regiments.

NOTE.—No story was ever more marred in the telling than the record of this regiment. I could find in North Carolina nothing but the roll of Battery A, in the "Roll of Honor" and the few names reported in Rumble's "History of Rowan," as belonging to Battery D. Not only half the men who went out with Capt. Reilly in 1861, but the remainder of the regiment were only to be found in the Archives Office in Washington. The reader will observe how miserably executed were even these reports, originally sent to Richmond, but captured in 1865, and transferred to the Federal Capital. Not only were the casualties, but even the residences of the men omitted, and in this way there may be errors as to some of the homes attributed.

NOTE.—This was the first of all the regiments to be organized and take the field. Its period of service was to be but six months, and it was thus disbanded in the Fall of 1861. It was known as the First Regiment of Volunteers, until the enrollment of the ten regiments of State Troops, when the command of Col. M. F. Stokes was called the First Regiment, and thus the men who had followed Col. D. H. Hill to Yorktown, became known as the Bethel Regiment from the fact of their participation in the battle at Big Bethel June 10th '61.
